Elemental: A Touching and Heartwarming Animation

Disney has just released another winner! Elemental, an animation directed by Peter Sohn, is set in the Elemental City, where four elements - fire, earth, water, and air - coexist. This movie revolves around Ember, voiced by Leah Lewis, a girl of fire element, and Wade, voiced by Mamoudou Athie, a young man of water element. The story begins as they meet in an accident in the basement of Ember's father's shop.

Elemental is one of the most well-made animation movies distributed by Disney so far. The movie has great computer-generated effects, like a futuristic hover train passing through a giant waterfall, and a stadium full of audience of different elements, all cheering for pumped-up clouds playing the Elemental version of NBA basketball. It features breathtaking flowers that thrive under water and anything else you could imagine. Other than that, the plot is touching and gripping. The love story between Ember and Wade is full of twists and ups and downs. The choice of music for different scenes completely synced with the audience's emotions - upbeat music for nerve-racking scenes, and romantic music for dancing scenes. Every piece of music captures the flow of viewers' emotions.

Not only is this movie eye-catching and emotionally enjoyable, but it also shares positive messages. Multiple elements living in harmony in the Elemental City promote the concepts of multiculturalism. In this movie, you can see different elements with different types of traditions. For example, fire sharing a traditional tasty snack of burnt balls of wood, and air sharing a hobby of watching sports. The phrase 'elements can't mix' was mentioned multiple times at the beginning of the movie. However, Ember and Wade of both fire and water element fell in love with each other, dispersing this idea. Neither did fire evaporate water, nor did water extinguish fire after they touched, wiping away barriers of love and encouraging viewers to search for love despite rac

I would definitely recommend this movie to all of you. It is suitable for audiences of all ages and provides a visually and emotionally fulfilling experience with educational messages. I would rate this movie a ten out of ten!
